The environment has failed faster than predicted, and people are being housed in what domed cities are available. Unfortunately, there are not enough domed cities for everyone, and some people must be left out. In this simulation, students act as the selecting committee and decide which people are allowed to enter the domed cities. The students, when making these value decisions, may consider such factors as the age, sex, race, marital status, occupation, sexual orientation, parental status, past history, and reproductive age of individuals being considered for admission.
